'22 ACCOMPLISHMENTS

Made major progress on the Willamette River

Our ReWild the Willamette campaign instigated 16 major changes to eight Willamette dams Improving fish passage, water quality and flows

Oregon Fish and Wildlife Commission support wild steelhead

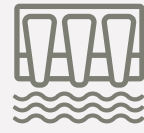

Decision makers voted to manage the North Umpqua River as an all-wild steelhead river thanks to the advocacy of the North Umpqua Coalition

Created the largest collection of rivers managed for wild fish

And helped secure substantial new monitoring to safeguard wild steelhead along the Oregon Coast

'23 GOALS

Begin dam removal on the Klamath River
Initiate removal of the four lower Klamath River dams, beginning the largest river restoration project in history

Safeguard 4,000+ miles of Oregon rivers
The River Democracy Act will add 4,000 river miles as Wild & Scenic. The Southwestern Oregon Watershed and Salmon Protection Act will stop mining on 100k acres of public lands

Improve cold water fish habitat
Invest $3 million to improve cold water fish habitat across 10 miles in the upper Molalla River and its tributaries

VISION FOR THE FUTURE

Recovering native fish
Pacific Northwest wild, native fish trend towards recovery, with specific salmon populations no longer needing federal protection

More community action
500,000 people are part of the groundswell of public support taking action for abundant wild fish and healthy, free-flowing rivers

Transition to wild abundance
An increasing number of Pacific Northwest rivers provide sustainable fishing opportunities for abundant wild fish without the use of hatchery programs

HOME WATERS: WILD IS THE FUTURE

MESSAGE FROM EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR MARK SHERWOOD

FROM THE HOME POOL

Greetings friends of wild fish,

In 2022, Native Fish Society celebrated our 26th year providing Northwest community members with a place to take action and support the revival of abundant wild fish, free-flowing rivers, and sustainable fisheries. Through your dedicated support, we were back in the field at full capacity forging lasting relationships to educate, inspire, and activate everyone who is passionate about keeping rivers and fish forever wild.

Together with our dedicated volunteers, generous donors, and capable partners, we steward some of the most iconic homewaters and native fish of the Pacific Northwest. Over this past year, our voices and actions on the river, in the courtroom, and in the halls of state capitols and congress have improved the water quality and fish passage in the Willamette River, helped create the largest network of rivers managed for wild fish south of British Columbia, and advanced data-driven reforms to build towards climate-resilient fisheries.

And to turn the tide for wild fish, we know the pace and scale of our efforts must continue to grow. So, we're nurturing our groundswell of public support to provide more accessible actions for volunteers in your backyard rivers and deepen the wild fish community's local involvement through regional chapters in order to take on the big challenges that stand in the way of abundant wild, native fish.

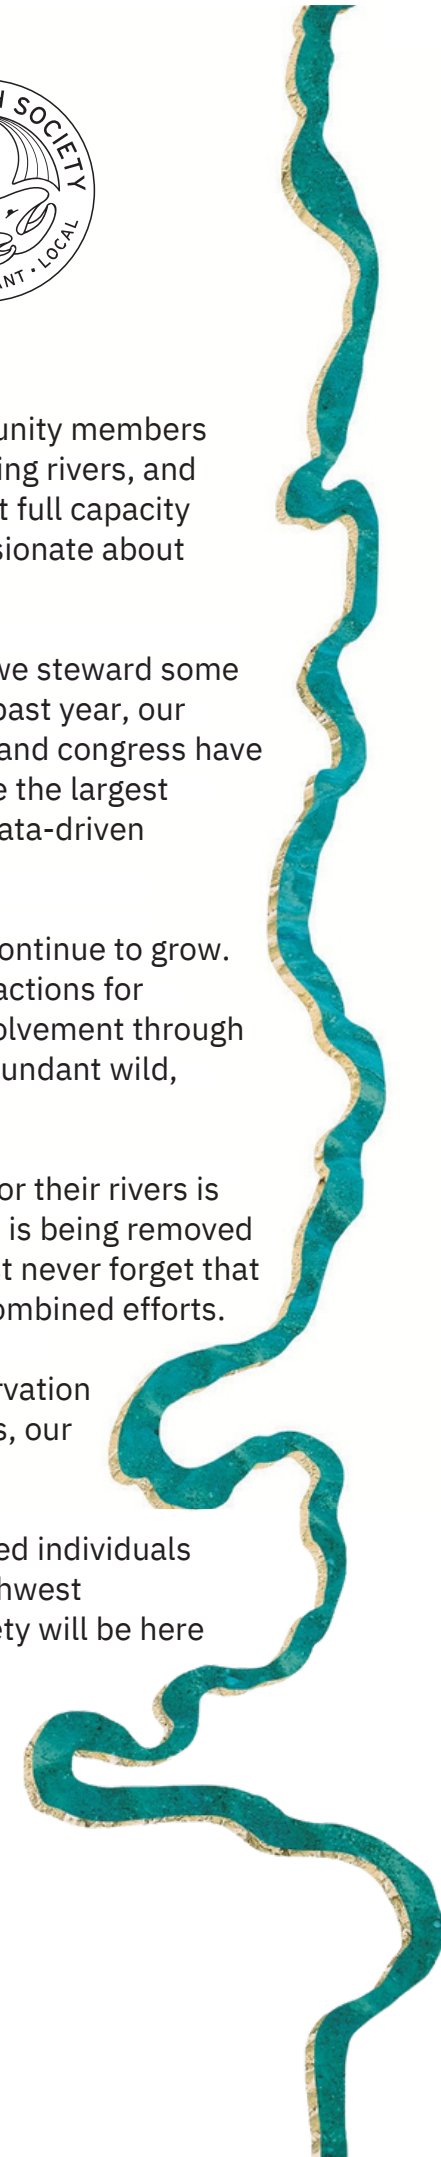

One great testament for the power of local communities coming together to care for their rivers is the removal of four major dams on the Klamath River - the first of which, Copco II, is being removed as I type out this letter! No matter the size of the obstacle facing wild fish, we must never forget that nature has a tremendous capacity for renewal that we can leverage through our combined efforts.

In this 2022 Annual Report, we're excited to share snapshots of our top 10 conservation campaigns throughout the Pacific Northwest, highlight our 2022 accomplishments, our goals for 2023, and how we're building towards our vision for the future.

Most importantly, none of this work would be possible without YOU - the committed individuals that volunteer, donate, and sustain our efforts. We pledge that until all of our Northwest communities enjoy healthy homewaters with abundant wild fish, Native Fish Society will be here supporting local voices, joining together to take collective action, and advancing science-based solutions to the root challenges facing native fish.

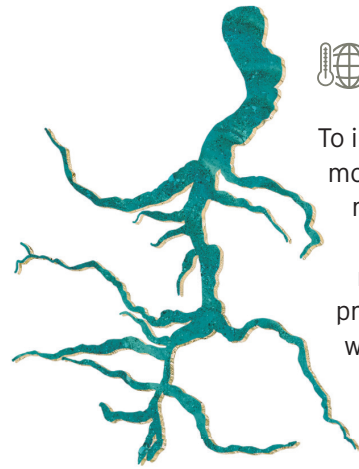

Wild is the Future,

Mark Sherwood
Executive Director

TOP 10 CONSERVATION CAMPAIGNS OF 2022

DESCHUTES RIVER Oregon

To increase cold water habitat for native fish we're monitoring flows and temperature and developing habitat restoration plans for Bakeoven and Buckhollow creeks. River Steward Matt Mendes is undertaking riparian restoration, trash removal, wild fish spawning area protection, and engaging youth. Staff are leading a working group to improve water quality for native fish, while advocating for a pathway to dam removal.

KLAMATH RIVER California

In 2023, removal will begin on Klamath's four lower dams, eventually opening more than 400 miles of habitat for native fish. Staff and volunteers are working to ensure dam removal begins next year, that wild fish recovery is the focus of future fish management efforts, and to continue collaborative efforts to improve habitat and water quality after dam removal.

EEL RIVER California

To open more than a hundred miles of cold-water habitats for native fish, Native Fish Society staff and volunteers are working with a coalition of NGOs and Tribal Nations to remove aging Scott and Cape Horn dams. Additionally, Native Fish Fellow Samantha Kannry and volunteers will conduct spawning surveys to collect data on wild winter steelhead.

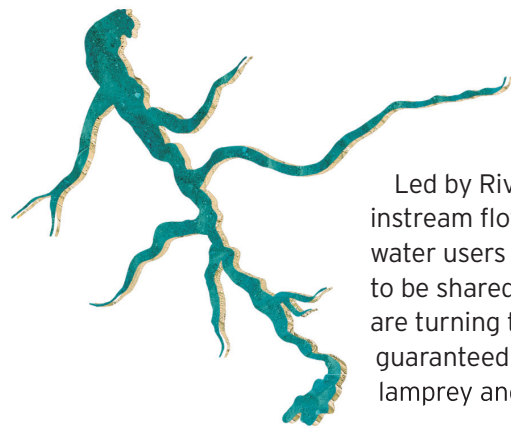

SOUTH & MAINSTEM UMPQUA Oregon

To open 2 miles of fish habitat we're working with Waterwatch of Oregon to remove Parrot Dam. Staff and volunteers hosted stewardship activities including river cleanups. This year Native Fish Society held our first Annual "Umpqua Bass Bash" where 30 community members removed 500+ invasive bass from the Umpqua River. Bass harm native fish populations by eating them.

MOLALLA RIVER Oregon

Native Fish Society staff, volunteers, state, federal, tribal, and industry partners are undertaking the largest habitat restoration project in Molalla River history. Our goal is to invest $3m to restore 10 miles of cold water habitats to help re-establish self-sustaining spring Chinook salmon and continue the recovery of winter steelhead and other native fish species.

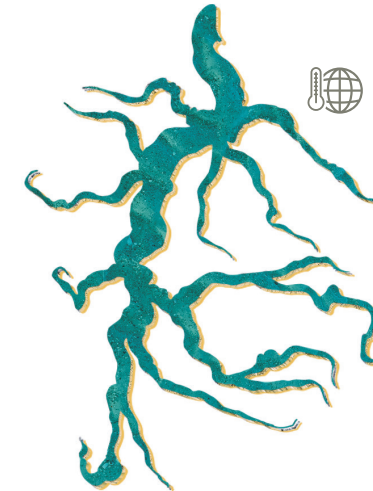

SHASTA RIVER California

Led by River Steward Andy Marx we've helped restore instream flows, improve water quality, and remind Shasta water users that rivers are a public resource to be shared and stewarded. Now, staff and volunteers are turning their attention to more fish-focused rules, like guaranteed instream flows for salmon, steelhead, and lamprey and protecting cold water refugia.

WHITE SALMON RIVER Washington

In collaboration with the Washington Department of Fish and Wildlife, Native Fish Society volunteers are conducting spawning surveys for wild salmon and steelhead in four tributaries of the free-flowing White Salmon River. This information is critical for cataloging how wild fish re-establish themselves in historic habitats once dams are removed and to encourage future dam removal activities.

WILLAMETTE RIVER Oregon

To set steelhead and Chinook salmon on the road to recovery, we're dramatically changing the way federal dams are operated. As a result of our advocacy and litigation, new dam operations provide volitional fish passage for juvenile salmon, which reconnects fish with their historic habitats above the dams. These changes also improve water quality and flows for fish downstream.

ROGUE RIVER Oregon

In the Rogue River we're protecting and expanding habitat restoration through legislation and work with our Congressional delegation; restoring iconic spring Chinook salmon through a federal petition under the Endangered Species Act; enacting fisheries reform and expanded monitoring through a state plan focused on winter and summer steelhead; and growing our grassroots community by launching a new Southern Oregon Chapter.

NORTH UMPQUA RIVER Oregon

To revive abundant wild summer steelhead in the North Umpqua, Native Fish Society staff help lead the North Umpqua Coalition, which advocated successfully to end the hatchery summer steelhead program and now is working to defend this decision in court. To benefit all the river's native fish, the removal of the harmful Winchester Dam is a key focus in 2023.

Guided by the best-available science, Native Fish Society advocates for the recovery of wild, native fish and promotes the stewardship of the habitats that sustain us all.
