'24 ACCOMPLISHMENTS

Wild Steelhead Release

New catch and release regulations on the Rogue River will reduce the risk of overharvest on wild winter steelhead for the first time in Oregon history.

Restored Spawning Habitat

Installed 14 log jams and restored habitat in a 500' side channel to benefit native spring Chinook and winter steelhead in the free-flowing Molalla River.

Skeena River Selective Gear

With the Lax Kw'alaams Band and Wild Fish Conservancy, a fish trap was used on the Skeena River to collect steelhead data and create a selective fishing solution for the First Nation food fishery.

'25 GOALS

Remove Umpqua River Dams & Barriers

To provide critical cold water habitat connectivity to this iconic native fish river we're working to advance the removal of four barriers including Winchester Dam.

ReWilding the Willamette

Reconnect the headwaters, restore cleaner water and secure habitat investments to revive abundant wild spring Chinook and winter steelhead in the Willamette River.

More Oregon Wild Salmon & Steelhead Rivers

Oregon has a once in a generation opportunity to increase our public investment in healthy rivers and abundant wild fish instead of concrete and pellets.

VISION FOR THE FUTURE

Recovering native fish

Pacific Northwest wild, native fish trend towards recovery, with specific salmon populations no longer needing federal protection.

More community action

500,000 people are part of the groundswell of public support taking action for abundant wild fish and healthy, free-flowing rivers.

Transition to wild abundance

An increasing number of Pacific Northwest rivers provide sustainable fishing opportunities for abundant wild fish without the use of hatchery programs.

HOMEWATERS: RUN WILD

A MESSAGE FROM EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR MARK SHERWOOD

FROM THE HOME POOL

Greetings friends of wild fish,

The Native Fish Society is proud to be the place where you take action and support the revival of abundant wild fish, free-flowing rivers, and sustainable fisheries.

The best part of our work is seeing a community come together, each giving what they can, and developing a collective power that sets the bar for conservation at a new level. Some years we see this happen once. In 2024, we celebrated two significant victories! Each victory represents the tireless efforts of our passionate volunteers, skillful staff members, invaluable partners, and YOU - our committed supporters.

There was tremendous excitement to see the Klamath dams finally come down in 2024. At Native Fish Society, we're channeling some of that enthusiasm towards removing the Winchester Dam on the North Umpqua River, enabling spring Chinook and summer steelhead unfettered access to prime habitat high in the watershed.

Earlier in 2024, the 500,000-acre footprint of the Tillamook and Clatsop state forests received the biggest bump in public habitat protection in a generation thanks to a settlement we helped deliver that will provide 120 feet of forest along all fish-bearing streams. These improvements stabilize banks, filter water, and restore habitat for threatened native fish like coho salmon while delivering cleaner drinking water to half a million Oregonians.

In the summer of 2024, a community-wide coalition led by River Steward Tom Derry and former Northern Oregon Coordinator Dr. Liz Perkin restored 3 miles of cold-water habitats in the free-flowing Molalla River - the most significant habitat restoration project in the river's history!

Your sustaining support continues this wild momentum. Momentum to restore and protect more habitat on the Deschutes, Shasta, and Rogue rivers. And momentum to ensure that until all our Northwest communities enjoy healthy homewaters with abundant wild fish, we will continue to join together to take collective action and advance science-based solutions to the root challenges facing native fish.

We're deeply grateful for your sustaining support and commitment to the revival of abundant wild fish.

WILD & FREE

NATIVE FISH SOCIETY CAMPAIGNS

To create more spawning and rearing habitat for wild spring Chinook and winter steelhead, we led a coalition of partners and mustered the power of boots on the ground volunteers, to restore a 500' side channel and install 14 log jams.

To accelerate the recovery of wild salmon and steelhead following dam removal on the Klamath River, volunteer River Steward Andy Marx and staff are working on the Shasta River to secure guaranteed minimum flows needed for native fish spawning and rearing habitats and protection of critical cold water sources.

To protect the Rogue River's wild winter steelhead from overharvest during a period of low returns, we're celebrating new catch and release regulations for these fish during the 2024/25 season.

To revive Oregon's state fish, the Chinook salmon, to abundance along the coast, we're petitioning for federal protections for these iconic fish under the Endangered Species Act.

To revive abundant wild salmon, steelhead, and Pacific lamprey in the iconic North Umpqua River, staff and volunteers are keeping the pressure on to remove Winchester Dam, a harmful dam that limits access to 160 river miles.

To safeguard critical spawning and rearing habitat for spring Chinook and summer steelhead we're working with local community members to curtail the use of damaging high-powered jet boats in the upper Rogue River.

To improve the health of the Deschutes River, staff and partners are undertaking scientific studies to verify the management of the lower Deschutes protects native fish to the greatest extent possible; we're partnering to restore habitat and cold water resources in key tributaries; and we're developing the case for dam removal of the Pelton Round Butte hydropower complex.

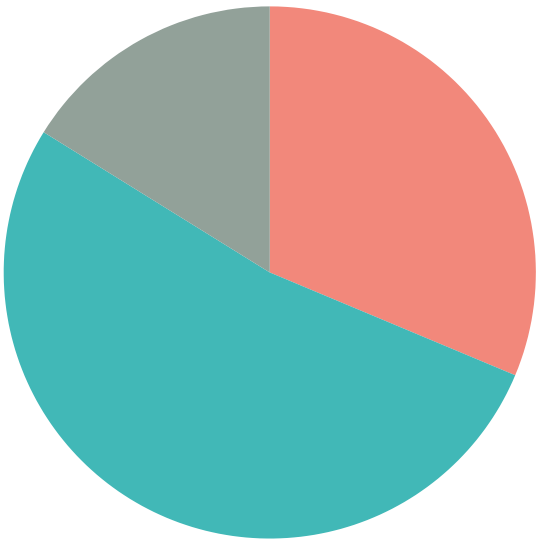

To set steelhead and Chinook salmon on the road to recovery, we're working with partners, including the Confederated Tribes of Grand Ronde, to improve fish passage and water quality by removing hydropower from the Willamette project dams.
